Highly fibrous feeder roots and non-circling anchoring roots shown in the photos are two great reasons to try the Better air-pruning container. The same application of nutrients, moisture and sunlight was given to plants grown in standard containers and in the Better air-pruning container. The resulting root ball weight comparison was amazing. The Better air-pruning container had a mass dry weight of 600+ grams while the standard container yielded 200+ grams. Fibrous root branching was obvious to all observers as was the increased caliper of the plant grown in the Better air-pruning container. These results were not conducted under scientific conditions but are a real time, in field side-by-side test by an experienced and reputable Florida Grower. Ask us for the details!
